PROJECT MANAGEMENT

PROJECT MANAGEMENT THAT MAKES BUSINESS SENSE

With over 30 years' lighting design experience, we understand the importance of effective project management, and how it allows designers, architects and contractors to maintain focus on creating stunning exterior spaces.

Switch to the experts

Separating project management of your landscape lighting can free up resources, reduce wastage and help maximise your return on investment. It also reduces project stress and downtime, allowing people to concentrate on their specialist areas.

The reputation and credibility of any landscape design business rests on its ability to consistently produce creative results that last. Word-of-mouth endorsement, industry and client referrals are integral to the business, leaving very little room for error and dissatisfaction.

“We greatly appreciated your expertise and ability to work seamlessly with all members of the project team which included landscape designers, electricians and building contractors. We valued your commitment to the project and the follow up service and advice that you have provided. Light on Landscape was a very important part of our design and architectural team.”

Julie Ann Cox

Outsourcing your project management for the lighting component of your commission is an added insurance against unforeseeable installation challenges and miscalculations. It's not unheard of for lighting aspects to run into problems – problems that can cause costly delays, workflow interruptions and a client's loss of confidence in your landscaping team. Lighting concepts on paper don't always translate into successful executions, so it's best to hand this aspect of the project to lighting experts who can solve issues promptly. We understand each step in the process, have the knowledge and technical expertise to anticipate potential pitfalls and deliver a best practice solution to your project.
